STANFORD frosh golfers enjoyed an almost completely successful season this year. In the first scheduled team match played with Polytechnic High School, the Papooses swept the field with a 9-0 victory. San Mateo Junior College, the next opponent, was defeated 8-1. The third rival, Lowell High School, offered more formidable competition than either of the Cards' previous opponents but garnered only $1\frac{1}{2}$ points to Stanford's $7\frac{1}{2}$.

The real test of the year came in the match with the California frosh. It was found when all the points had been tallied that the teams had tied with $13\frac{1}{2}$ points each. Those playing in this contest were Cal Manning, Walt Fitch, George Cannon, Jack Welch, Ed Bosbyshell, and Bob Jordan. In spite of this rather uncertain finish, all agree that the frosh season was, on the whole, a good one. Outstanding among the Papooses was Cal Manning, who won the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Freshman Championship.

A change affecting both freshman and varsity practice was made this year; seeking a better method of squad training, Coach Edward M. Twiggs inaugurated a cumulative medal system of inter-team competition to replace the former system of match ladder play. To explain this new practice he stated: "The change was made chiefly for the purpose of improving this type of medal play among members of the team. The object of this is to place them in a better position to qualify in match play tournaments. Each player is in weekly competition with the rest of the team."
