Led by returning veterans Greg Picard, Bob Bouchier, Rick Harris, John Bottomley, Leith Anderson, Terry Curran, and Walt Driver, the Stanford Golf Team promises to have another winning season. Greg Pitzer and Sandy Adelman should round out the team's strength and add many team points. Last year's team placed a close second in the AAWU's, after a very controversial judges decision. Greg Picard, Bob Bouchier, Rich Harris, and John Bottomley placed in the top ten individual scores. Greg took 3rd by three shots, and was penalized three shots on an interpretation of the rules. Bob Bouchier placed 5th. At the NCAA's the Tribe placed 6th, with both Rich Harris and Bob Bouchier qualifying for the finals. This year's nationals at Shawnee on the Delaware should find many of Stanford's top six in the finals. Greg Pitzer is a tremendous hitter and putter, and should place high. And Harris, Bouchier, and Picard should be able to put Stanford in the top three in the country.

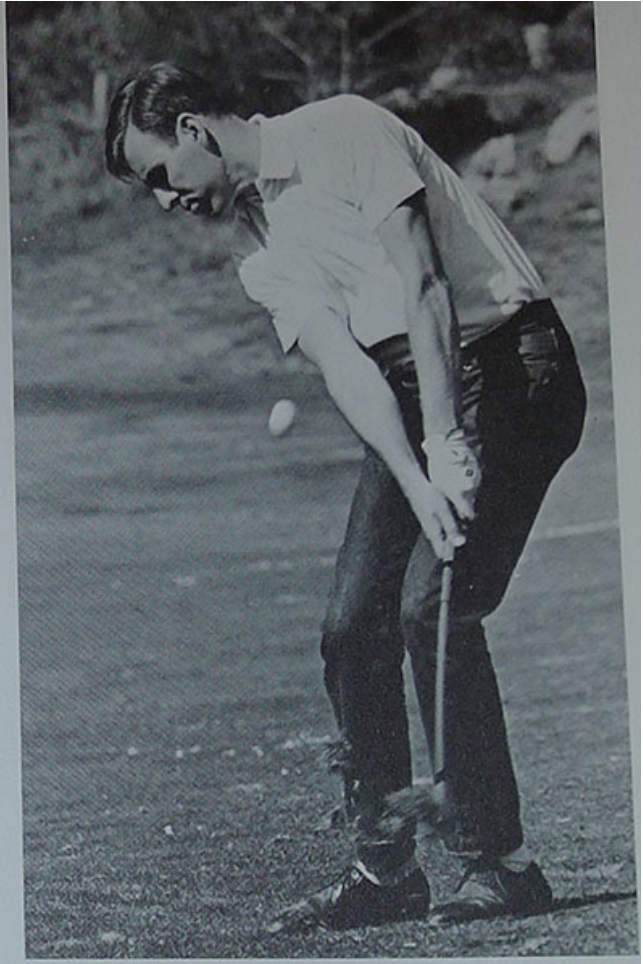

Pitzer blasts out of sand trap. He one-putted and salvaged a par for the hole.

Number two man Bouchier found himself in trouble, just as many do on the mountainous Stanford course. Finally, after many deep probes, he came up with many weeds, one fish, and the little round white brute.

Picard watches as the ball curves into the cup for a birdie.

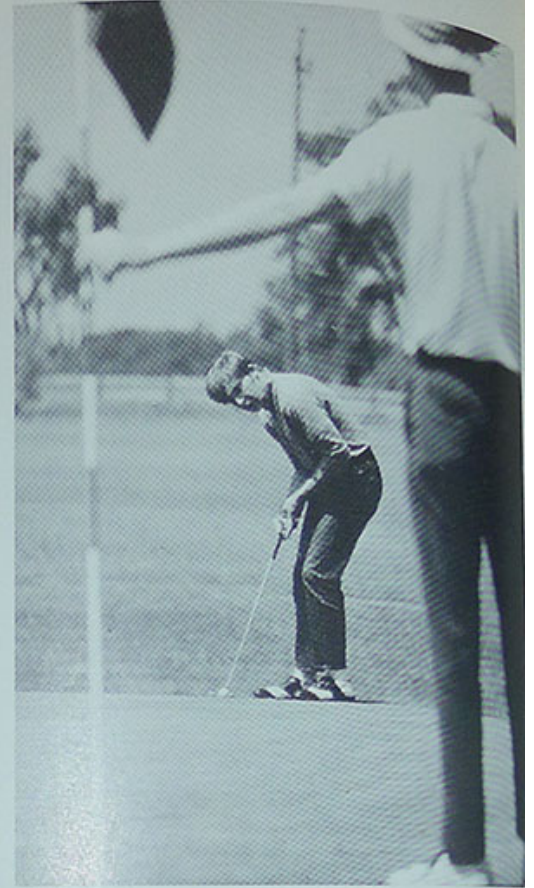

Bouchier pitches another great shot from 80 yards out.

Cow pasture

pool is what it used to be called, but the modern game of golf demands considerably more than this somewhat rustic name implies. Battling 8,000 yards of hills, underbrush, and numerous water hazards and sandtraps, requires a skill and consistency appreciated by few. Illustrating this perfectly is the Stanford golf team, owner of back-to-back second place finishes in the AAWU behind USC, because of the Southerners' greater consistency. In the nationals last year, Rich Harris led the field for the first three rounds and finished ninth, four shots back. And early this year Greg Pitzer broke the course record at Santa Cruz with a sizzling 66. With a strong and experienced team of Harris, Pitzer, Sandy Adelman, Ray Isbell, Bob Riddell, Bruce Doering, Terry Curran, George Bevan, and Jeff Blankenburg, the potential is there.
